The fourth Matrix movie is here

By Street team

The fourth movie in the Matrix franchise is coming out this month. The new movie is called The Matrix Resurrections (מטריקס: התחייה).

For those of you who have never watched any Matrix movies, they take place in a world where computers have taken over. Humans are imprisoned in a virtual reality system called the Matrix. The movies focus on Neo (Keanu Reeves), Trinity (Carrie-Anne Moss) and Morpheus (Laurence Fishburne). They are trying to save humanity from the system.

The Matrix Resurrections takes place 20 years after the events of The Matrix Revolutions (2003). Neo is living a pretty normal life as Thomas Anderson in San Francisco. He goes to see his therapist and she gives him some blue pills. The therapist is in fact Trinity, but the two of them don't recognize each other. Morpheus gives him the red pill and he is taken back into the world of the Matrix.

The Matrix movies were created by the Wachowskis. When the first movie came out in 1999, they were known as The Wachowski Brothers. However, in the 2000s the two came out as transgender women, so they are now, in fact, sisters. The first movie has been a big success all over the world and has won four Oscars. It had a big effect on today's movies, television, art and even fashion.

Did you know?

- The Matrix started out as a comic book by the Wachowskis.
- Will Smith and Nicolas Cage were both offered the part of Neo and said no.
- Russell Crowe, Sean Connery and Samuel L. Jackson were offered the part of Morpheus and said no.
- The actors in the movie had to learn philosophy before making the movie.
- Scenes that happen in the computer world of the Matrix were given a green tint and scenes that happen in the real world have a blue tint.
- The actors had to practice every day for four months to do the fight scenes.
